But More Republicans Now Say Troop Increase Is Needed
BROAD OPPOSITION TO BUSH'S IRAQ PLAN

President Bush's plan to send roughly 21,000 additional troops to Iraq has drawn broad opposition from the American public. If anything, the plan has triggered increased partisan polarization on the debate over what to do in Iraq. While most Republicans support Bush's initiative, Democrats overwhelmingly oppose it, and a solid majority of Democrats (62%) say that Congress should try to block it by withholding funding for the additional troops.

GOP support for the president's proposal reflects a sharp shift of opinion among Republicans on the broader question regarding U.S. troop levels in Iraq. Currently, 47% of Republicans believe that more troops are needed in Iraq, up from 26% who held that view in December. By comparison, just a quarter of independents say more troops are needed (up seven points from December) and just 11% of Democrats agree.

Support for the president's proposal is undercut by doubts about the impact that U.S. forces can have in Iraq. Americans are divided over whether the presence of American forces in Iraq is doing more to help the Iraqi government by providing needed support (43%) or more to hurt the Iraqi government by making them too dependent on the U.S. (43%). In addition, most lack confidence that the Iraqis can take over security in the provinces by November, as promised. And just 37% believe that America's security from terrorist attacks depends on our success in Iraq – a fundamental part of President Bush’s case for the additional troops.

The latest national survey by the Pew Research Center for the People & the Press, conducted Jan. 10-15 among 1,708 adults, shows that the public remains focused on the situation in Iraq. Nearly half (46%) say they are following news from Iraq very closely. When it comes to President Bush’s plan to send more troops to Iraq, 43% say they have heard “a lot” about it. This compares with just 16% who had heard a lot about the Baker-Hamilton commission’s report last month. Attention to the Bush proposal is high across the political spectrum.

The public’s view of the situation in Iraq is decidedly negative – 62% say things are not going well right now, largely unchanged from December but up from just 43% in June of 2006. And more believe it was the wrong decision to take military action in Iraq by a 51%-40% margin; in June, slightly more believed it was the right decision than the wrong decision (by 49%-44%).

Republican backing for Bush’s proposal reflects a broader agreement with the arguments presented in support of a troop increase. More than seven-in-ten Republicans (72%) believe that the U.S. military presence in Iraq is strengthening the Iraqi government by giving them needed support, and about six-in-ten (63%) are at least somewhat confident that the Iraqi government can take over responsibility for security in the provinces by November, as promised. In addition, 62% of Republicans agree with the president that America’s safety from terrorism depends on achieving success in Iraq.

Democrats take a very different view of the situation in Iraq. Just 23% believe that America’s safety from terrorism depends on success in Iraq, and there is little confidence in the Iraqi government. About six-in-ten Democrats (62%) believe that the U.S. presence in Iraq weakens the Iraqi government by making them too dependent on us, and 64% are either not too or not at all confident that the Iraqi government can take over security responsibilities by November.

News Interest: Iraq, Unusual Weather

Iraq continued to attract the most public interest of any story this month. While 46% paid very close attention to news about the situation in Iraq, 31% say they very closely followed reports on Saddam Hussein’s execution.

The unusual winter weather affecting much of the U.S. also attracted considerable interest. Nearly four-in-ten Americans (39%) say they paid close attention to stories on unusual winter weather. A quarter say they tracked former president Gerald Ford’s death and memorial service very closely; an identical percentage closely tracked news about the incoming Democratic leaders in Congress. Just 17% say they paid very close attention to the U.S. air strikes on suspected terrorist sites in Somalia.

ABOUT THIS SURVEY

Results for this survey are based on telephone interviews conducted under the direction of Princeton Survey Research Associates International among a nationwide sample of 1,708 adults, 18 years of age or older, from January 10-15, 2007. For results based on the total sample, one can say with 95% confidence that the error attributable to sampling is plus or minus 3 percentage points. For results based on January 11-15, 2007 (N=1,384), the sampling error is plus or minus 3.5 percentage points.

In addition to sampling error, one should bear in mind that question wording and practical difficulties in conducting surveys can introduce error or bias into the findings of opinion polls.

ABOUT THE CENTER

The Pew Research Center for the People & the Press is an independent opinion research group that studies attitudes toward the press, politics and public policy issues. We are sponsored by The Pew Charitable Trusts and are one of six projects that make up the Pew Research Center, a nonpartisan "fact tank" that provides information on the issues, attitudes and trends shaping America and the world.

The Center's purpose is to serve as a forum for ideas on the media and public policy through public opinion research. In this role it serves as an important information resource for political leaders, journalists, scholars, and public interest organizations. All of our current survey results are made available free of charge.

All of the Center's research and reports are collaborative products based on the input and analysis of the entire Center staff consisting of:

Andrew Kohut, Director
Scott Keeter, Director of Survey Research
Carroll Doherty and Michael Dimock, Associate Directors
Carolyn Funk, Richard Wike and Kim Parker, Senior Researchers
Nilanthi Samaranyake, Survey and Data Manager
