

FOR RELEASE JAN. 3, 2023

Faith on the Hill

The religious composition of the 118th Congress

BY Jeff Diamant

FOR MEDIA OR OTHER INQUIRIES:

Jeff Diamant, Senior Writer/Editor

Gregory A. Smith, Associate Director, Research

Achsah Callahan, Communications Manager

202.419.4372

www.pewresearch.org

RECOMMENDED CITATION

Pew Research Center, January, 2023, "Faith on the Hill: The religious composition of the 118th Congress"

About Pew Research Center

Pew Research Center is a nonpartisan, nonadvocacy fact tank that informs the public about the issues, attitudes and trends shaping the world. It does not take policy positions. The Center conducts public opinion polling, demographic research, computational social science research and other data-driven research. It studies politics and policy; news habits and media; the internet and technology; religion; race and ethnicity; international affairs; social, demographic and economic trends; science; research methodology and data science; and immigration and migration. Pew Research Center is a subsidiary of The Pew Charitable Trusts, its primary funder.

© Pew Research Center 2023

Acknowledgments

This report was produced by Pew Research Center with data collected by CQ Roll Call. Pew Research Center is solely responsible for the interpretation and reporting of the data. Find related reports online at pewresearch.org/religion.

This report is a collaborative effort based on the input and analysis of the following individuals:

Primary Researcher

Jeff Diamant, Senior Writer/Editor

Research Team

Alan Cooperman, Director of Religion Research

Gregory A. Smith, Associate Director of Research

Justin Nortey, Research Analyst

Editorial and Graphic Design

Michael Lipka, Editorial Manager

Rebecca Leppert, Editorial Assistant

David Kent, Senior Copy Editor

Bill Webster, Senior Information Graphics Designer

Communications and Web Publishing

Stacy Rosenberg, Associate Director, Digital

Reem Nadeem, Associate Digital Producer

Anna Schiller, Senior Communications Manager

Achsah Callahan, Communications Manager

How we did this

Every two years, Pew Research Center analyzes the religious affiliation of members of the incoming Congress. This report is the eighth in the series, which started with the 111th Congress that began in 2009.

Data on members of Congress comes from CQ Roll Call, which surveys members about their demographic characteristics, including religious affiliation. Center researchers then code the data so that Congress can be compared with U.S. adults overall. For example, members of Congress who tell CQ Roll Call they are “Southern Baptists” are coded under the broader “Baptists” category.

Data in this report covers voting members of Congress sworn in on Jan. 3, 2023. This analysis includes 534 members of Congress rather than the full 535 because Congressman Donald McEachin of Virginia’s 4th District was reelected in November but died before the swearing-in; his seat will go unfilled until a February special election.

Data for all U.S. adults comes from multiple sources, including Pew Research Center’s 2021 National Public Opinion Reference Survey (NPORS), conducted May 29-Aug. 25, 2021; a survey on the Center’s American Trends Panel conducted Sept. 20-26, 2021; and the Center’s survey of Jewish Americans conducted Nov. 19, 2019-June 3, 2020. Here is more information about how Pew Research Center measures the religious composition of the United States.

Faith on the Hill

The religious composition of the 118th Congress

As it begins its 118th session, the U.S. Congress remains largely untouched by two trends that have long marked religious life in the United States: a decades-long decline in the share of Americans who identify as Christian, and a corresponding increase in the percentage who say they have no religious affiliation.

Since 2007, the share of Christians in the general population has dropped from 78% to its present level of 63%. Nearly three-in-ten U.S. adults now say they are religiously unaffiliated, describing themselves as atheist, agnostic or “nothing in particular,” up from 16% who did not identify with a religion 16 years ago. But Christians make up 88% of the voting members of the new 118th Congress being sworn in on Jan. 3 – only a few percentage points lower than the Christian share of Congress in the late 1970s. In the 96th Congress, which was in session in 1979-1980, 91% of members of Congress identified as Christian.

Just like in recent sessions, only one member of the new Congress – Sen. Kyrsten Sinema, independent of Arizona – identifies as religiously unaffiliated. Another (Democratic Rep. Jared Huffman of California) describes himself as humanist, and 20 are categorized as having unknown religious affiliations. Most of these members declined to state a religious affiliation when they were asked by CQ Roll

118th U.S. Congress is more Protestant than the general population

Religion	Number in Congress	% of Congress	% of U.S. adults
Christian	469	87.8	63
Protestant	303	56.7	40
Baptist	67	12.5	11
Methodist	31	5.8	4
Anglican/Episcopal	22	4.1	1
Presbyterian	25	4.7	2
Lutheran	22	4.1	3
Congregationalist	3	0.6	<1
Nondenom. Protestant	15	2.8	7
Pentecostal	2	0.4	4
Restorationist	4	0.7	1
Adventist	2	0.4	<1
Reformed	2	0.4	<1
Pietist	1	0.2	<1
Unspecified/other	107	20	6
Catholic	148	27.7	21
Mormon	9	1.7	2
Orthodox Christian	8	1.5	1
Messianic Jewish	1	0.2	<1
Jewish	33	6.2	2
Buddhist	2	0.4	1
Muslim	3	0.6	1
Hindu	2	0.4	1
Unitarian Universalist	3	0.6	<1
Humanist	1	0.2	<1
Unaffiliated	1	0.2	29
Something else	0	0	2
Don't know/refused	20	3.7	2
Total	534	100	100

Note: Figures may not add to 100% or to subtotals due to rounding. General public figures for Protestant subgroups do not sum to total indicated because the figures come from two different sources. One seat was vacant at the beginning of the 118th Congress: Virginia's 4th District, due to the recent death of Rep. Donald McEachin. Source: Figures for Congress based on Pew Research Center analysis of data collected by CQ Roll Call, reflecting voting members of Congress to be sworn in on Jan. 3, 2023. Figures for U.S. adults based on several Center surveys; see “How we did this” for details. “Faith on the Hill: The religious composition of the 118th Congress”

PEW RESEARCH CENTER

Call, which serves as the primary data source for this analysis.

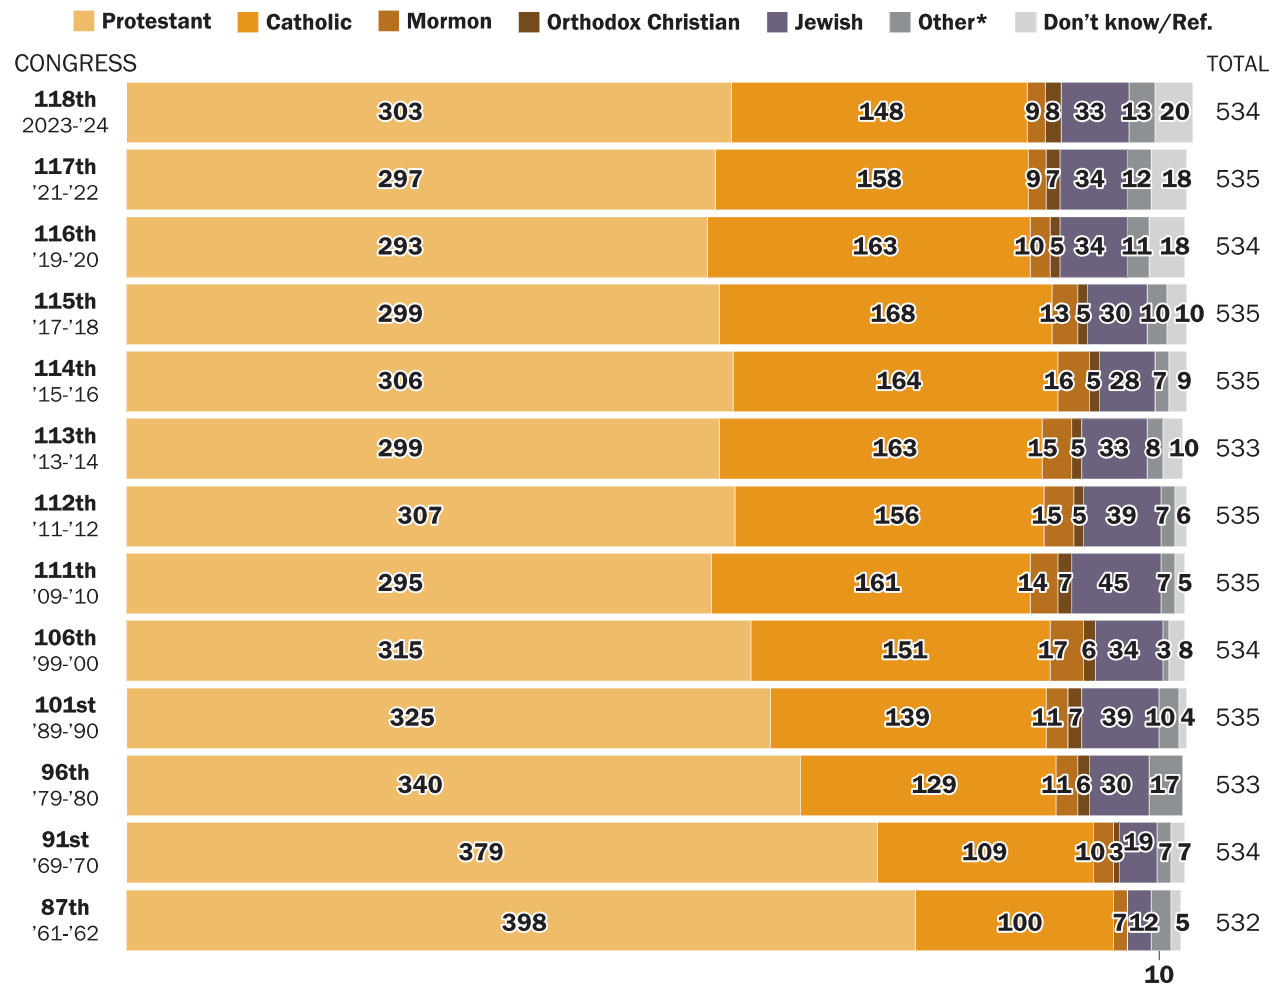

That said, the 469 Christians (out of 534 total members) at the start of the 2023-2024 session comprise – by a smidgen – the lowest number since Pew Research Center began analyzing the religious affiliation of the House and Senate for the 2009-2010 session.<sup>1</sup> During the eight most recent sessions, the number of Christians in Congress was above 470, and it exceeded 500 as of 1970.<sup>2</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> Data in this report covers voting members of Congress sworn in on Jan. 3, 2023. Congressman-elect Donald McEachin of Virginia's 4th District died before the swearing-in; his seat will go unfilled until a February special election. Therefore, this analysis includes 534 members of Congress, rather than the full 535.

<sup>2</sup> While Pew Research Center has published an analysis of CQ Roll Call data on the religious backgrounds of members of Congress at the start of every congressional session since the 111th Congress (which met in 2009-2010), it also has examined CQ Roll Call data from the 91st, 96th, 101st and 106th Congresses. Data analyzed from the 87th Congress, which met in 1961-1962, comes from the Library of Congress.

Changes in the religious makeup of Congress (1961-2023)

* Includes Buddhists, Muslims, Hindus, Unitarian Universalists, humanists, the unaffiliated and other faiths, including other Christian subgroups. For example, the 118th Congress includes one member who identifies as a Messianic Jew.

Note: One seat was vacant at the beginning of the 118th Congress: Virginia's 4th District, due to the recent death of Rep. Donald McEachin. Figures for the 117th Congress were updated in this analysis to include one Jewish and three Protestant members of Congress whose races were still undecided at the time of publication of the last "Faith on the Hill" report.

Source: Pew Research Center analysis of data collected by CQ Roll Call, reflecting voting members of Congress to be sworn in on Jan. 3, 2023.

"Faith on the Hill: The religious composition of the 118th Congress"

PEW RESEARCH CENTER

There are 303 Protestants in the new Congress, an increase of six from the previous Congress and the first time in four sessions (since 2015-2016) that the number has topped 300. The number of Protestants who do not specify a particular denomination or denominational family – providing vague or broad answers such as “Protestant,” “Christian” or “evangelical Protestant” – rose from 96 to 107, continuing a recent trend.<sup>3</sup> And the number who specifically identify as nondenominational Protestants rose from 12 to 15.<sup>4</sup>

Two Protestant denominational families – Methodists and Episcopalians – each have four fewer members in the 118th Congress, with Methodists down to 31 and Episcopalians down to 22. And Presbyterians have one fewer member (25). These groups also have gone through broader membership declines in the U.S. in recent decades.

Religiously, 118th Congress looks similar to 117th

Religion	117th Congress		118th Congress		Change
	Number	%	Number	%
Christian	471	88.0	469	87.8	-2
Protestant	297	55.5	303	56.7	+6
Baptist	67	12.5	67	12.5	0
Methodist	35	6.5	31	5.8	-4
Anglican/Episcopal	26	4.9	22	4.1	-4
Presbyterian	26	4.9	25	4.7	-1
Lutheran	22	4.1	22	4.1	0
Congregationalist	3	0.6	3	0.6	0
Nondenom. Protestant	12	2.2	15	2.8	+3
Pentecostal	2	0.4	2	0.4	0
Restorationist	4	0.7	4	0.7	0
Adventist	2	0.4	2	0.4	0
Reformed	1	0.2	2	0.4	+1
Pietist	1	0.2	1	0.2	0
Unspecified/other	96	17.9	107	20.0	+11
Catholic	158	29.5	148	27.7	-10
Mormon	9	1.7	9	1.7	0
Orthodox Christian	7	1.3	8	1.5	+1
Messianic Jewish	0	0	1	0.2	+1
Jewish	34	6.4	33	6.2	-1
Buddhist	2	0.4	2	0.4	0
Muslim	3	0.6	3	0.6	0
Hindu	2	0.4	2	0.4	0
Unitarian Universalist	3	0.6	3	0.6	0
Humanist	1	0.2	1	0.2	0
Unaffiliated	1	0.2	1	0.2	0
Don't know/refused	18	3.4	20	3.7	+2
Total	535	100	534	100

Note: Figures may not add to 100% or to subtotals due to rounding. One seat was vacant at the beginning of the 118th Congress: Virginia's 4th District, due to the recent death of Rep. Donald McEachin. Figures for the 117th Congress were updated in this analysis to include one Jewish and three Protestant members of Congress whose races were still undecided at the time of publication of the last “Faith on the Hill” report.

Source: Pew Research Center analysis of data collected by CQ Roll Call, reflecting voting members of Congress to be sworn in on Jan. 3, 2023.

“Faith on the Hill: The religious composition of the 118th Congress”

PEW RESEARCH CENTER

<sup>3</sup> These members are labeled, collectively, in the charts under Protestants as “Unspecified/other.”

<sup>4</sup> Nondenominational Protestants are those who specifically describe themselves this way. This category is distinct from “Unspecified/other” Protestants, who give general, sometimes vague answers about their Christian affiliation, such as “Protestant,” “just a Christian,” “evangelical Protestant” or “evangelical Christian.”

The new Congress has 148 Catholics, 10 fewer than the 117th. Still, Catholics make up about 28% of the members of Congress, a greater share than in the U.S. population overall (21%).

The number of members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (sometimes called Mormons) in Congress remained the same (nine). There are eight Orthodox Christians in the 118th Congress, one more than there was at the start of the previous session. Rep. Mary Peltola, D-Alaska, is an Orthodox Christian who joined the House of Representatives later during the 117th Congress after a special election. Peltola, who identifies with the Russian Orthodox Church, was reelected to her first full term in November.

There is now one member of Congress who identifies as a Messianic Jew – Republican Rep. Anna Paulina Luna, a new member from Florida who also has publicly described herself as a Christian.

Sixty-five members of the 118th Congress are not categorized as Christian, a slight uptick from 64 in the previous session. Two more members than in the 117th Congress either declined to describe their religious identity or otherwise have unknown affiliations; 20 members now fit this description. This includes Republican Rep. George Santos of New York, a newcomer to Congress who was moved to this category following revelations that he misrepresented parts of his life story and resume during his 2022 midterm campaign. Santos described himself as Jewish during the campaign but later told the New York Post that he is “clearly Catholic” and that he had only said he was “Jew-ish” because he had heard stories about his grandmother converting from Judaism to Catholicism.

Otherwise, there is general stability in the numbers of members of other non-Christian religious groups. Jews make up a slim majority of the non-Christian members of Congress, although the number of Jews has decreased by one from the 117th session (which had 34 Jewish members) to the 118th (33). Jews continue to make up 6% of the members of Congress, a greater share than they do of the general population (2%).

There are three Muslims – André Carson, D-Ind.; Ilhan Omar, D-Minn.; and Rashida Tlaib, D-Mich. – and two Hindus (Ro Khanna, D-Calif., and Raja Krishnamoorthi, D-Ill.) in the House, all of whom won reelection in 2022. The two Buddhists in Congress, Rep. Hank Johnson, D-Ga., and Sen. Mazie Hirono, D-Hawaii, also are returning members. Muslims, Hindus and Buddhists all are represented in Congress in about equal proportion to their respective shares of the U.S. population (roughly 1% or less each).

The three members of Congress who identify as Unitarian Universalists (Reps. Deborah Ross of North Carolina and Ami Bera and Judy Chu of California) also are returning, as are Huffman (the lone humanist) and Sinema (the only member who describes herself as religiously unaffiliated).

The religious makeup of the 118th Congress

Note: Figures may not add to 100% due to rounding. One seat was vacant at the beginning of the 118th Congress: Virginia's 4th District, due to the recent death of Rep. Donald McEachin.

Source: Pew Research Center analysis of data collected by CQ Roll Call, reflecting voting members of Congress to be sworn in on Jan. 3, 2023.

"Faith on the Hill: The religious composition of the 118th Congress"

PEW RESEARCH CENTER

These are among the key findings of an analysis by Pew Research Center of CQ Roll Call data on the religious affiliations of members of Congress, gathered through questionnaires and follow-up phone calls to candidates' and members' offices.<sup>5</sup> The CQ questionnaire asks members what religious group, if any, they belong to. It does not attempt to measure their religious beliefs or practices. The Pew Research Center analysis compares the religious affiliations of members of Congress with the Center's survey data on the U.S. public.

<sup>5</sup> In this report, Congress is defined as both the Senate and the House of Representatives. Nonvoting delegates who represent U.S. territories and the District of Columbia are not counted in this analysis. They are: Aumua Amata Coleman Radewagen, R-American Samoa; James C. Moylan, R-Guam; Jenniffer González-Colón, R-Puerto Rico; Eleanor Holmes Norton, D-District of Columbia; Stacey Plaskett, D-Virgin Islands; and Gregorio Kilili Camacho Sablan, D-Northern Mariana Islands. All are Catholic except Norton (who is Anglican/Episcopalian) and Plaskett (who is Lutheran).

Differences by chamber

Both the Senate and the House are numerically dominated by Christians, with each chamber having a similar Protestant majority (57% in the House, 56% in the Senate). Looking at Protestant subgroups, Baptists make up a slightly larger share of the House (13%) than the Senate (10%). Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Lutherans and Congregationalists comprise larger shares in the Senate than in the House.

Catholics account for a slightly greater share of House than Senate members (28% and 26%, respectively). There are eight Orthodox Christians in the House, but none in the Senate.

Looking at non-Christian religions, Jews have a wider presence in the Senate (9%) than in the House (6%). There is one Buddhist in the House, Democratic Rep. Hank Johnson of Georgia, and one in the Senate, Democrat Mazie Hirono of Hawaii. All of the Muslims, Hindus and Unitarian Universalists in Congress are in the House.

House has slightly higher share of Christians than Senate in 118th Congress

Religion	—House—		—Senate—		U.S. adults
	Number	%	Number	%	%
Christian	384	88.5	85	85.0	63
Protestant	247	56.9	56	56.0	40
Baptist	57	13.1	10	10.0	11
Methodist	26	6.0	5	5.0	4
Anglican/Episcopal	16	3.7	6	6.0	1
Presbyterian	15	3.5	10	10.0	2
Lutheran	15	3.5	7	7.0	3
Congregationalist	1	0.2	2	2.0	<1
Nondenom. Protestant	12	2.8	3	3.0	7
Pentecostal	1	0.2	1	1.0	4
Restorationist	3	0.7	1	1.0	1
Adventist	2	0.5	0	0.0	<1
Reformed	2	0.5	0	0.0	<1
Pietist	1	0.2	0	0.0	<1
Unspecified/other	96	22.1	11	11.0	6
Catholic	122	28.1	26	26.0	21
Mormon	6	1.4	3	3.0	2
Orthodox Christian	8	1.8	0	0.0	1
Messianic Jewish	1	0.2	0	0	<1
Jewish	24	5.5	9	9.0	2
Buddhist	1	0.2	1	1.0	1
Muslim	3	0.7	0	0.0	1
Hindu	2	0.5	0	0.0	1
Unitarian Universalist	3	0.7	0	0.0	<1
Humanist	1	0.2	0	0	<1
Unaffiliated	0	0.0	1	1.0	29
Something else	0	0	0	0	2
Don't know/refused	16	3.7	4	4.0	1
Total	434	100	100	100	100

Note: Figures may not add to 100% or to subtotals due to rounding. One seat was vacant at the beginning of the 118th Congress: Virginia's 4th District, due to the recent death of Rep. Donald McEachin. General public figures for Protestant subgroups do not sum to total indicated because the figures come from two different sources.

Source: Figures for Congress based on Pew Research Center analysis of data collected by CQ Roll Call, reflecting voting members of Congress to be sworn in on Jan. 3, 2023. Figures for U.S. adults based on several Center surveys; see "How we did this" for details.

"Faith on the Hill: The religious composition of the 118th Congress"

PEW RESEARCH CENTER

Differences by party

Large majorities of both Republicans and Democrats in Congress identify as Christian, although there is still a substantial gap between the two parties. While nearly all congressional Republicans – 268 out of 271, or 99% – describe themselves as Christians, the same is true for about three-quarters of Democrats (201 out of 263, or 76%). Both parties are more heavily Christian than are U.S. adults as a whole (63%).

Democrats in Congress also are much less likely than Republicans to identify as Protestant (44% vs. 69%), but a greater share of Democrats than Republicans are Catholic (31% vs. 25%).

Among the Democrats in both chambers combined, 12% are Jewish. An additional 7% did not specify a religious affiliation when they were asked, accounting for 19 of the 20 members of Congress overall whose affiliations are unknown. All the Unitarian Universalists, Muslims, Buddhists and Hindus in Congress are Democrats, and there is one Democrat who identifies as humanist (Rep. Jared Huffman of California).

Most Democrats, nearly all Republicans in 118th Congress identify as Christian

Religion	—Democrats—			—Republicans—
	House number	Senate number	%	House number	Senate number	%
Christian	165	36	76.4	219	49	98.9
Protestant	95	21	44.1	152	35	69.0
Baptist	24	2	9.9	33	8	15.1
Methodist	16	2	6.8	10	3	4.8
Anglican/Episcopal	7	5	4.6	9	1	3.7
Presbyterian	7	4	4.2	8	6	5.2
Lutheran	7	3	3.8	8	4	4.4
Congregationalist	0	2	0.8	1	0	0.4
Nondenom. Protestant	4	0	1.5	8	3	4.1
Pentecostal	0	0	0	1	1	0.7
Restorationist	0	0	0	3	1	1.5
Adventist	2	0	0.8	0	0	0
Reformed	1	0	0.4	1	0	0.4
Pietist	0	0	0	1	0	0.4
Unspecified/other Prot.	27	3	11.4	69	8	28.4
Catholic	66	15	30.8	56	11	24.7
Mormon	0	0	0	6	3	3.3
Orthodox Christian	4	0	1.5	4	0	1.5
Messianic Jewish	0	0	0	1	0	0.4
Jewish	22	9	11.8	2	0	0.7
Buddhist	1	1	0.8	0	0	0
Muslim	3	0	1.1	0	0	0
Hindu	2	0	0.8	0	0	0
Unitarian Universalist	3	0	1.1	0	0	0
Humanist	1	0	0.4	0	0	0
Unaffiliated	0	1	0.4	0	0	0
Don't know/refused	15	4	7.2	1	0	0.4
Total	212	51	100	222	49	100

Note: Figures may not add to 100% or to subtotals due to rounding. One seat was vacant at the beginning of the 118th Congress: Virginia's 4th District, due to the recent death of Rep. Donald McEachin. Figures for Democrats include independents who caucus with Democrats.

Source: Pew Research Center analysis of data collected by CQ Roll Call, reflecting voting members of Congress to be sworn in on Jan. 3, 2023.

"Faith on the Hill: The religious composition of the 118th Congress"

PEW RESEARCH CENTER

The lone member of Congress who describes herself as religiously unaffiliated is Sen. Kyrsten Sinema of Arizona, who recently switched her party affiliation from Democratic to independent. She is counted as a Democrat in this analysis because she has said she will not caucus with Republicans.<sup>6</sup>

Nearly seven-in-ten Republican members of Congress identify as Protestants (69%). While many identify with a specific denomination or a broader denominational family such as Baptist (15%), Methodist (5%) or Presbyterian (5%), 28% of Republicans are Protestants who do not specify a denomination. This includes those who describe themselves as just “Christian,” those who say they are just “Protestant,” and a few who call themselves “evangelical Christian” or “evangelical Protestant.” This “Unspecified/other” Protestant category does not include the additional 4% of GOP members who describe themselves as nondenominational Protestants.

All nine members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (sometimes called Mormons) in Congress are Republicans. The one member who identifies as a Messianic Jew, Florida newcomer Rep. Anna Paulina Luna, is also a Republican. Orthodox Christians, meanwhile, are evenly split between the two parties, with four Democrats and four Republicans.

Two Republicans in Congress are Jewish: returning Rep. David Kustoff of Tennessee and freshman Rep. Max Miller of Ohio. Another Republican newcomer, Rep. George Santos of New York, was initially coded as Jewish but is now categorized as “Don’t know/refused” following the admission that he misrepresented parts of his life story, including his Jewish heritage.

---

<sup>6</sup> All three independents in Congress – Sinema, Angus King of Maine and Bernie Sanders of Vermont – are counted as Democrats in this analysis; King and Sanders caucus with the Democrats. Sinema, who said she will not caucus with Republicans, is the only member of Congress who identifies as religiously unaffiliated. King is in the “Anglican/Episcopal” category, and Sanders is Jewish.

First-time members

While the share of the U.S. population that is Protestant continues to decline, newcomers to Congress are substantially more likely than returning members to identify as Protestant: Nearly two-thirds of freshmen (64%) are Protestants, compared with 55% of incumbents.

Nearly 30% of all newcomers describe themselves as just “Christian,” “Protestant,” “evangelical Christian” or “evangelical Protestant,” compared with 18% of returning members who fall into this “Unspecified/other” Protestant category. An additional five new members (6% of all freshmen) specifically describe themselves as nondenominational Protestants, versus 2% of returning members.

At the same time, newcomers are just as likely as incumbents to identify as Christian (88% each), in part because Catholics are less prevalent among freshmen than among returning members (22% vs. 29%).

Roughly equal shares of newcomers and incumbents identify as Christians in 118th Congress; Protestants make up bigger portion of freshmen than incumbents

Religion	—Incumbents—		—Freshmen—
	Number	%	Number	%
Christian	398	87.9	71	87.7
Protestant	251	55.4	52	64.2
Baptist	57	12.6	10	12.3
Methodist	28	6.2	3	3.7
Anglican/Episcopal	19	4.2	3	3.7
Presbyterian	22	4.9	3	3.7
Lutheran	20	4.4	2	2.5
Congregationalist	3	0.7	0	0
Nondenom. Protestant	10	2.2	5	6.2
Pentecostal	1	0.2	1	1.2
Restorationist	4	0.9	0	0
Adventist	2	0.4	0	0
Reformed	1	0.2	1	1.2
Pietist	1	0.2	0	0
Unspecified/other	83	18.3	24	29.6
Catholic	130	28.7	18	22.2
Mormon	9	2.0	0	0
Orthodox Christian	8	1.8	0	0
Messianic Jewish	0	0	1	1.2
Jewish	28	6.2	5	6.2
Buddhist	2	0.4	0	0
Muslim	3	0.7	0	0
Hindu	2	0.4	0	0
Unitarian Universalist	3	0.7	0	0
Humanist	1	0.2	0	0
Unaffiliated	1	0.2	0	0
Don't know/refused	15	3.3	5	6.2
Total	453	100	81	100

Note: Figures may not add to 100% or to subtotals due to rounding. One seat was vacant at the beginning of the 118th Congress: Virginia's 4th District, due to the recent death of Rep. Donald McEachin.

Source: Pew Research Center analysis of data collected by CQ Roll Call, reflecting voting members of Congress to be sworn in on Jan. 3, 2023.

“Faith on the Hill: The religious composition of the 118th Congress”

PEW RESEARCH CENTER

There also are nine members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and eight Orthodox Christians among the incumbents. No newcomers identify with either of these groups.

Jewish members of Congress make up 6% of all freshmen, identical to the share of Jewish returning members. There are no Buddhists, Muslims or Hindus among freshmen members of Congress, and the religious affiliations of five congressional newcomers – including Santos – are unknown.