Form 990, Part III, Line 1, Description of Organization Mission:

Pew Research Center is a nonpartisan "fact tank" that informs the public about the issues, attitudes and trends shaping America and the world. Pew Research Center generates a foundation of facts that enriches the public dialogue and supports sound decision-making. It conducts public opinion polling, demographic research, content analysis and other empirical social science research. Pew Research Center does not take policy positions.

Form 990, Part III, Line 4a, Program Service Accomplishments:

Data labs research: We use computational methods (big data) to complement and expand on the Center's existing research agenda to further our understanding of the public's views online and their electronic trails of behavior.

Global attitudes & trends research: We conduct comparative, international research on an array of subjects, ranging from people's assessments of their own lives to their attitudes about the current state of the world, democracy, and multilateralism. Every year we publish dozens of reports and analyses that help explain America to the world and the world to Americans regarding the rapid changes taking place around the globe and the relevant geopolitical and economic events of the day.

Internet & technology research: We analyze the social impact of digital technologies, and we examine people's online activities and the internet's role in their lives. Our focus is on how technology changes affect families, communities, education, health care and medicine, civic and political life, and workers' activities. Key topics include technology use, social networking, mobile connectivity, online privacy, and teens and technology.

Journalism & media research: We assess the state of news and information in a changing society, including how news is consumed, who is reporting it, and how technology is changing the information landscape. Major reports have examined political polarization and media habits, misinformation, news use across social media platforms, America's shifting statehouse press, and the state of the news media.

Methodology research: Is core to the Research Center's ability to conduct original, independent work. We continue to search for ways to expand and strengthen the traditional methodologies that underlie survey research and to explore the potential of alternate methods of conducting surveys and measuring public opinion.

Race and ethnicity research: We chronicle the ever-changing racial and ethnic landscape of the United States. We bring understanding to the political, economic, and cultural experience of individuals and communities through surveys, demographic studies, social media analysis, and other forms of social scientific research.

Religion & public life research: We seek to promote a deeper understanding of issues at the intersection of religion and public affairs in the U.S. and around the world. Through public opinion surveys, demographic studies, and other social science research, we examine the religious composition of countries, the influence of religion on politics, the extent of government and social restrictions on religion, and views on abortion, same-sex marriage, stem cell research, and many other topics. Our U.S. religious landscape survey is a benchmark for understanding religion in the United States. Our Pew-Templeton global religious futures research analyzes religious change and its impact on societies around the world.

Science & society research: We study the impact of scientific research and innovation on society. Our research focuses on the intersection of science with all aspects of society from politics and policy-making, to religious and ethical considerations, to education and the economy. The research aims to understand what citizens and scientists think about science issues that raise important policy and ethical debates, including climate change, pandemics, space exploration, emerging science and technology innovations, public trust in science, and issues connected with how science information is disseminated and understood in today's media ecology.

Social & demographic trends: We study behaviors and attitudes of Americans in key realms of daily life, combining original public opinion research with economic and demographic analysis.

U.S. politics & policy research: We provide independent opinion research about American attitudes on politics and major policy issues and study the changing U.S. electorate by measuring long-term trends in political values and public policy priorities, as well as conducting directors, officers, and employees certify that they have read and will continue to follow the applicable conflict of interest policy and complete a form disclosing their potential conflicts. Pew Research Center's conflict of interest policies requires the: (1) impartial fulfillment of their roles in Pew Research Center's affairs; (2) disclosure of actual or potential financial or other conflicts of interest involving Pew Research Center; (3) review of reportable affiliations; and (4) recusal and abstention in all situations of actual, potential, or perceived conflict of interest. These and other requirements are monitored, reviewed and resolved on an ongoing basis pursuant to the applicable conflict of interest policy.

Form 990, Part VI, Section B, Line 15:

Annually, the executive committee of the board of Pew Research Center engages an independent compensation consultant to conduct compensation analyses for the organization's President, officers and key employees. As part of these analyses, the independent compensation consultant identifies, gathers, and analyzes appropriate comparability data upon which the committee and the full board rely to assess the reasonableness of the total proposed compensation (including benefits) of the president, officers, and key employees. The compensation consultant prepares written reports memorializing their analyses and provides them to Pew Research Center's executive committee for review together with the compensation consultant's written opinion that the proposed compensation arrangements are "reasonable" within the meaning of Treas. Reg. 53.4958-4(b)(1)(ii)(A). The committee reviews the compensation consultant's analyses and opinions at a meeting, in which the consultant participates and responds to questions. The committee sets compensation for the officers and key employees, and makes a recommendation to the full board for compensation for the president. The full board makes annual decisions with respect to proposed compensation for the president based upon the data in the relevant report and the opinion of the compensation consultant that the proposed compensation is reasonable. The board's decision regarding the proposed compensation increases and resulting total compensation for the president is also based on the board's assessment of the president's performance. These decisions, and the bases for these decisions, are contemporaneously documented in the minutes. The executive committee and board members who vote on compensation for the president, officers, and key employees do not have a conflict of interest with respect to these compensation arrangements.
