President's Health, Kurds' Plight -- Top Stories Of Month
PRESS 'UNFAIR' TO QUAYLE; KENNEDY COVERAGE BLASTED

The American public is highly critical of the press for its coverage of the alleged rape at the Kennedy family estate in Palm Beach, Florida and because of the way it has portrayed Vice President Dan Quayle in the aftermath of the President's hospitalization.

According to the latest Times Mirror monthly News Interest Index, most Americans (55%) think that the press is unfair in the way it covers the Vice President. Only one in three Americans (33%) regard coverage of him as fair. Republicans and Independents were more likely than Democrats to be critical of the way the press covers Quayle, but even Democrats divided sharply on the issue (43% fair, 44% unfair). Feeling that the media is unfair to Dan Quayle is as prevalent today as it was at the high point of the controversy over his candidacy in 1988. An August 1988 Times Mirror poll also found 55% believing that the press was covering Quayle unfairly.

Almost half (45%) of the public believes that the Kennedy rape allegation received too much coverage and a huge 70% majority of the public disapproved of the release of the name of the victim in that case. Disapproval was equally apparent when the question informed respondents that the young woman had returned to the Kennedy Palm Beach estate after a night of drinking and dancing and when the question gave no information about the context of the allegations.

In addition to disapproving of the release of the young woman's name, the public believed the worst about the media's motives. Only 9% thought that news organizations released the woman's name to show that society does not attach shame to the victim of rape, while 80% saw it as a commercially motivated decision.

Views about the Kennedy coverage and other sensational stories are reflected in the public's intense criticism of press practices. The Times Mirror News Interest Index finds that only 12% of the public believes that the press acts "very responsibly" in covering the personal and ethical behavior of politicians. And, 72% of the public believes the press often invades the privacy of those it covers. Criticism of press performance in these areas is as sharp as it has been in any past Times Mirror survey.

President Bush's heart problems and the plight of the Kurds were the news stories that attracted the most public attention over the past month.

However, there was little evidence that the public had any strong news focus during this period. No individual event was named as the most important news of the month by more than 15% of Americans and the most widely expressed view of the news was that there was too much coverage of the Palm Beach story - volunteered by 45% of respondents.

Thirty-eight percent of respondents polled by the Times Mirror Center for the People and the Press said they followed news of George Bush's heart problems very closely, while a statistically equal 36% said they followed the situation of the Kurds and efforts to help them very closely. In a follow-up question the two stories were cited equally often as the news followed most closely during the preceding four weeks (by 22% and 23% respectively).

The level of interest expressed in the Kurds is half as great as was interest in Gulf news during both the Desert Shield and Desert Storm phases of the conflict. However, interest in the condition of the Kurds and efforts to help them far exceeds the level of interest accorded most overseas stories and equals the March 1991 level of public attentiveness to the civil war in southern Iraq.

Interest in President Bush's heart troubles was nearly rivaled by the amount of interest in the companion story, concerns about Dan Quayle's ability to serve as President. Twenty-six percent of the public followed the Quayle controversy very closely. Interest in this story and the President's health problems were equally apparent among Republicans and among Democrats.
News about the condition of the economy was the number three story of the Times Mirror News Interest Index with 33% saying they followed such news very closely. Economic news has achieved about this level of public attentiveness in each survey since the onset of the recession in the Fall.

White House Chief of Staff John Sununu's transportation troubles reached a larger audience than do most comparable "Washington stories". Twenty-four percent of the public followed the Sununu travel news very closely. By way of comparison, only 15% were following Attorney General Ed Meese's conflict of interest problems very closely in May, 1988, and the findings of the Senate committee investigating the "Keating Five" drew the close attention of just 12% of the public a few months ago.

News about the devastating cyclone in Bangladesh was followed closely by 23% of the public, which is about as many Americans as were attentive to the major earthquake that struck Iran last summer. While a relatively small segment of the public paid close attention to this story, most people were aware of the magnitude of the disaster. Fifty-three percent of those sampled correctly estimated the number of casualties caused by the earthquake when given four possible answers from which to choose.

The Kennedy rape allegation was followed very closely by only 21% of Times Mirror respondents, less than half the percentage volunteering that the story was over-covered. However, curiously the Kennedy rape allegation ranked third in the follow-up question that asked respondents to name the single news story they had followed most closely this month (by 15%). This suggests that while the audience for this story may be limited in size, it is an intensely interested one.

President Bush's educational reform plan attracted far less public attention than did his heart fibrillations - just 14% followed news of the President's ideas about educational reform very closely. However, the poll showed that the public is aware of the Bush position on key elements in the plan. Seventy-two percent believed that Bush favored requiring students to take nationwide competency tests and 54% felt the President favored a voucher plan that would enable parents to pick their children's schools.

The public was less well-informed about many other Bush administration policy positions. Only a bare majority (50%) believed that the President favored a reduction in long-term capital gains. A very solid 63% majority thought Bush favored a seven day waiting period for the purchase of handguns and about the same proportion (65%) believed the President favored strong conservation measures to reduce dependence on foreign oil. Only 40% thought the Bush administration would be opposed to increasing import taxes on goods coming into the country from Mexico.

Interest in the political and economic problems of the Soviet Union has not increased with the end of the war in the Gulf. In fact, fewer Americans said they followed news about the Soviet Union very closely (14%) in the current survey than made such reports back in mid-March (20%), when the Gulf was still dominating public consciousness. Interest in the political and economic problems of the Soviet Union is roughly half what it was in the late spring/early summer of 1990.

Tellingly, the 34% who could identify Boris Yeltsin (up from 20% in June, 1990) was dwarfed by the 75% who knew the identity of William Kennedy Smith.

The Kitty Kelley biography of Nancy Reagan attracted the close attention of 8% of the public, but as many as 30% of the public cited the Nancy Reagan, Frank Sinatra relationship as the reason why the singer had been in the news recently.

CNN Continues to Win Praise for Coverage

The public accolades given CNN for its war coverage appear to have carried over to general news coverage. CNN was named by 41% as the network doing the best job in covering the news lately, followed by ABC at 18%, NBC 14% and CBS 13%. Earlier this year when the question was asked about coverage of the war, CNN led its closest rival, ABC, by a larger margin - 61% to 12%, but the cable network led ABC by a thin 27% to 21% margin in the early phases of the Gulf crisis (September, 1990).

Other Matters

Just one in four Americans (24%) could name a Democrat who has been mentioned as a possible Presidential candidate for 1992. Among rank and file Democrats in the sample, recollection of candidates for '92 was only marginally higher (28%). Cuomo (9%) and Tsongas (7%) were the names most often recalled by people in the survey.

Times Mirror respondents were cognitively challenged by the term "politically correct" - 48% said they had heard of it, but just 14% could define it correctly.

Question: In general, how would you rate the job the press has done in covering (STORY FOLLOWED MOST CLOSELY IN Q.11); excellent, good, only fair, or poor?
SURVEY METHODOLOGY

The survey results are based on telephone interviews conducted among 1,206 adults, 18 years of age or older, during the period May 16 - 19, 1991. For results based on the total sample, one can say with 95% confidence that the error attributable to sampling and other random effects is plus or minus 3 percentage points. The sample was divided into two random halves (Form I - 603 interviews; Form II - 603 interviews). The sampling error for results of questions based on Form I or Form II only is plus or minus 4 percentage points. In addition to sampling error, one should bear in mind that question wording and practical difficulties in conducting surveys can introduce error or bias into the findings of opinion polls.
