

All Expenditures Data

This document contains all the expense categories Pew Forum researchers considered in the process of determining which expenditures most closely reflect each group's annual advocacy-related spending. Figures selected for inclusion in the analysis are marked with an "x." For some groups, researchers determined that none of the available figures appropriately reflected advocacy-related spending, in which case no figure was selected and the group was not included in the analysis. Changes to selected expenditure figures for particular groups from the November 2011 report are explained in the notes at the end of the document.

Changes in the May 2012 Update

In response to feedback on the November 2011 report, the Pew Forum added five new groups, deleted one group and modified the expenditure figures for a few groups. (The Pew Forum was not able to obtain annual advocacy expenditures for three of the five new groups, so those groups are not included here.) In addition, Pew Forum researchers again reviewed the annual advocacy expenditures for some international relief organizations. As the Methodology notes, these groups typically do not itemize their advocacy expenses. Researchers therefore sought to identify budget categories that reflect spending by these groups to educate policymakers, constituents and the public, such as "public awareness and education." Upon further review, researchers determined that some expenditure categories should be changed in the new edition of the report. All changes to expenditures are indicated in the list above with an asterisk and explained below.

Barnabas Aid

In its review of some international relief organizations, the Pew Forum determined that a significant portion of what had been included as advocacy expenses for this group in the November 2011 report ($1,002,792 in 2009 and $653,569 in 2008 for "Program Service Expenses") were funds for direct grants to support Christian organizations outside the U.S. No other expense category appropriately fits the report's broad definition of religion-related advocacy, so no expenditure data for this group have been selected for analysis in the May 2012 report.

Catholic Relief Services

Under the decision rules used in the November 2011 report, the group's "Public Awareness" expenditures were selected for the analysis ($4,673,000 for 2009 and $4,220,000 for 2008). Catholic Relief Services questioned the figures and provided the Pew Forum with a report from its internal budget database showing that its expenditures for "Policy and Advocacy" for 2009 were $835,796. The group also reported that it has five regional staffers who directly support the organization's advocacy activities and that the total salary for these individuals is about $300,000. These figures were combined and the total ($1,135,796) was selected for the expenditures analysis in the May 2012 report.

Church World Service

"Education and Advocacy" expenditures data for 2009 were not available for the November 2011 report, so the Pew Forum used Church World Service's 2008 figure ($2,928,739) for the expenditures analysis. During its further review of some international relief organizations, the Pew Forum contacted Church World Service and asked for more information. The group informed the Pew Forum that its annual advocacy expenditures for 2009 were available in its audited financial statements. As a result, the 2009 expenditure figure has been added and selected for analysis in the May 2012 report.

Heritage Foundation, DeVos Center for Religion and Civil Society

The Heritage Foundation's DeVos Center for Religion and Civil Society was not included in the November 2011 report.

Institute for Social Policy and Understanding

The Institute for Social Policy and Understanding was not included in the November 2011 report.

Lutheran World Relief

During its review of some international relief organizations, the Pew Forum discovered that in the November 2011 report it incorrectly selected Lutheran World Relief's expenditures for lobbying as narrowly defined by the IRS ($9,655 for 2009 and $16,385 for 2008). This narrow definition likely underestimated the group's spending for the broad definition of advocacy used in the report. Lutheran World Relief subsequently provided the Pew Forum with a report from its internal accounting system showing expenditures for its "Public Policy" efforts, which better fit the definition of lobbying and religion-related advocacy used in the report. These figures have been selected for analysis in the updated report.

National Association of Evangelicals

In the November 2011 report, the NAE was incorrectly categorized as an organization whose principal mission is advocacy; under the decision rules used in the report, the association's total expenditures were selected ($1,026,565 for 2009 and $978,367 for 2008). The NAE questioned the figures and informed the Pew Forum that its annual advocacy expenditures are approximately $150,000. But it did not provide public records or other documents to substantiate a specific figure. As a result, no expenditure data for the group have been selected for analysis in the May 2012 report.

United States Conference of Catholic Bishops

The USCCB questioned the advocacy expenditure figures used in the November 2011 report, which came from the "Policy Activities Expenses" reported in the group's 2008-2009 Consolidated Financial Statements ($26,662,111 for 2009 and $25,270,631 for 2008). In its communications with the Pew Forum, the USCCB said its advocacy expenditures are closer to $1 million, but the group did not provide a detailed breakdown or verifiable source for the estimate. As a result, no expenditures data for the group have been selected for analysis in the updated report.

Washington Office on Latin America

WOLA is no longer primarily funded and supported by churches and religious organizations, so the group has been removed from the study.
